Understanding garage doors

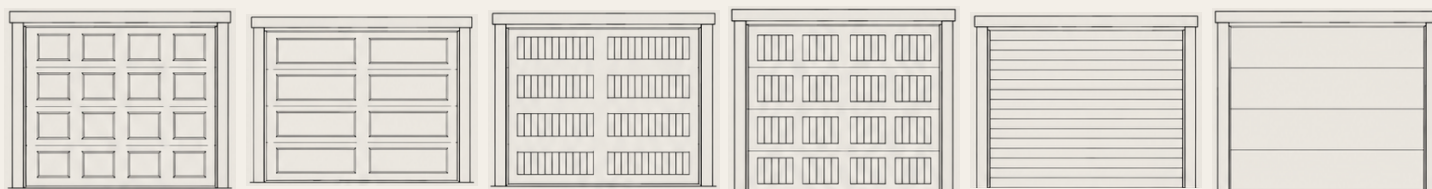

Garage doors are manufactured from a variety of materials. The material it's constructed from—typically steel, aluminum, composite wood, or vinyl—affects durability, maintenance, insulation, and overall performance. Each has its own benefits and considerations, from strength and security to resistance against the elements. Our Canadian climate—with its wide temperature swings and harsh conditions—demands quality construction and proper insulation. Steel garage doors remain the most popular choice, trusted for their durability, low maintenance, and excellent insulation ratings. The lower the R-value, the more heat transfers through the door.
